Geoinformatics have pronounced role on assessing spatial biodiversity information for conservation assessment and planning. With advent of advanced remote sensing sensors and machine learning tools, it enabled a better understanding of the ecological systems for decision making. Remote sensing applications has been widely used as a source of environmental information for monitoring biodiversity elements. The temporal dimension of remote sensing is a valuable attribute for studies of biodiversity and habitats at landscape to global scales, providing a means to study the impacts of environmental change. Advance machine learning tools are efficient in analysing large volume of data for accurately mapping the biodiversity patterns and monitoring the changes. There has been considerable development in cloud computing with regard to handling large data set on free web platforms for visualization and geospatial analysis. With the development of new active and passive sensors with improved spatial, spectral, radiometric, and temporal resolutions, Earth observation data along with better data integration approaches can contribute immensely to biodiversity change research.

Removal Efficiency of Constructed Wetlands Treatment

- Primarily physical processes of filtration and sedimentation remove suspended solids (Vymazal and Kröpfelová, 2009).
- Organic compounds are removed primarily by microbial aerobic and anaerobic activities
- Colloidal particles can then be removed from the wastewater by filtration, sedimentation or adsorption.
- To some degree there is the removal of nitrogen, namely the processes of ammonification, nitrification and denitrification.
- Phosphorus removal occurs primarily by binding of phosphorus onto the filter material and trapped sediment and by wetland vegetation biomass sampling (Kadlec and Wallace, 2009).

Indian Institute of Remote Sensing Outreach Programme on Remote Sensing for Lunar Science organised by Pillai HOC College of Engineering & Technology on 11th August 2021

This online workshop is focused on remote sensing of the Moon through various scientific satellite missions and discussions of their important findings. The Moon serves as a unique laboratory for understanding the evolution of terrestrial planets. The past few decades of remote sensing aided by in-situ exploration of the lunar surface followed by recent advances in the data analysis techniques have contributed significantly to our current understanding of the physical and chemical processes occurring over the planetary surfaces. Wealth of data acquired by various lunar missions has resulted in discoveries, provided huge opportunities to study the Moon by the examination of new ideas and testing data analysis algorithms

This online workshop will cover the following topics:

- Overview of Lunar Remote Sensing
- Reflectance spectroscopy and detection of endogenic water on the Moon: Examples from recent lunar Missions.
- Lunar South Pole Aitken basin - understanding mantle geochemistry
- Recent advances in radar exploration of the Moon.
- Chandrayaan-2 Imaging Infrared spectrometer (IIRS): Some initial results for mineral analysis.
- Mg-Spinel Mineralogy on the Moon

Indian Institute of Remote Sensing Outreach Programme on Geospatial Technology for Hydrological Modelling organised by Pillai HOC College of Engineering & Technology on 19th July 2021 - 30th July 2021

Hydrological modeling is an effective and essential tool for assessment, prediction and management of water resources, hydrological parameters and water movement/demand/use scenarios. The advancements in geospatial technology and data have opened a new avenues of research and operational applications of hydrological modelling. The hydrological models requires basic geo-referenced data such as, land use land cover (LULC), soil maps, and digital elevation models etc., for capturing the spatio-temporal variations of these thematic layers. Most of these datasets can be easily derived from remote sensing images and limited ground truth. The hydro-meteorological data such as precipitation, air and land surface temperature, solar radiation, evapotranspiration, soil moisture, river and lakes water levels, river discharge, and terrestrial water storage can be also be derived from remote sensing as well as from point based ground instruments. The GIS based platforms, both commercial and open source, provides an excellent interface for integration of all such geospatial and hydro-meteorological data to accomplish the hydrological modeling. Such modeling studies can be done at various spatio-temporal scales, ranging from city, watershed to basin level and at time scale of few hours to daily/annual time steps.

Contents:

Geospatial technology applications for Water Resources: An Overview

Type of hydrological models and Spatial, Non-spatial Data Inputs for Hydrological Modelling

Digital Elevation Model and its Derivatives for hydrological Modelling

Rainfall-Runoff Modelling

Snow/Glacier melt-Runoff Modelling

Soil Erosion and Sediment Yield Modelling

Indian Institute of Remote Sensing Outreach Programme on Geospatial Inputs for Enabling Master Plan Formulation organised by Pillai HOC College of Engineering & Technology on 11th October 2021 - 1st November 2021

The Indian cities are experiencing rapid growth with share of country's urban population increasing from 27% in 2001 to 32% in 2011. Majority of this growth has taken place in an unplanned and haphazard manner, the ill-effects of which are manifested in the form of poor quality of urban life. In order to ensure a planned development, the Govt. of India has launched the Atal Mission for Rejuvenation and Urban Transformation (AMRUT) Mission which has a sub-scheme on 'Formulation of GIS Based Master Plan for AMRUT cities'. IIRS along with Town and Country Planning Organisation (TCPO), Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs (MoHUA), GoI has developed the contents of the course for capacity building of personnel involved in the sub-scheme.

Current scenario of climate change due to intensified anthropogenic activities is one of the major causes for increased intensity and frequency of disasters. It is expected that there will be an increase in the number and severity of extreme climate events in the coming years. Urban population is highly vulnerable to increasing disasters and extreme events due to their sheer volume and density of population. The situation is exacerbated due to intensification of human activities, changes in land use/land cover, increase in impervious surfaces etc. in urban areas. Understanding the impact of these disasters in urban areas is of paramount importance in order to minimize the losses incurred as urban areas has significant contribution in a nation's growth as well as more and more population is being concentrated in urban areas. Geospatial technologies such as remote sensing, Geographic Information System (GIS) and Global Navigation Satellite System (GNSS) can be employed effectively for assessment and modeling of disasters. Remote sensing provides synoptic view and data required for updated mapping and timely information for disaster affected areas. Similarly, GIS and GNSS have been employed for various aspects of disaster cycle such as mapping and assessment, modeling of risk and vulnerabilities and disaster response system
